Trance in a Ball Room.

The Nashville Base Ball Club's dance, on Thursday night, was started by a singular occurrence, of which we find the following account in the Banner:

A little girl named Anna Daisy, apparently three years of age, had made her appearance in the ball room at nine o'clock, and, as far as could be ascertained without an escort. She had danced every set, and had partaken freely of all the refreshments given her up to eleven o'clock, when, overheated and looking very pale, she ran to the nearest seat and sat down. Here she pressed her hands to her forehead and leaned forward as though she were about to faint. All the simple remedies that could be thought of or recommended were used without avail. She sank into a kind of a stupor, from which it was thought she would never awake. Her respiration was hard and frequently attended with convulsions. She was laid out upon some chairs, and seemed without the power of moving either limbs or body. Her eyes all the while being wide open, all believed her in a trance.

Dr. Menes was summoned, and administered several restoratives, which seemed partially to relieve her from the stupor, but not from the hysterical condition into which she had fallen. Her countenance then assumed a lively appearance, and she commenced bending the forefinger of her right hand soon after, and most gracefully, raising her hand, pointed it toward heaven and said "mother." She next set her hand flat upon her breast, and for a moment her countenance wore an expression of deep melancholy. There issued from her lips a most beautiful and eloquent prayer, the language of which was select and appropriate, inasmuch that all were astonished. She next repeated a great number of verses, and where her memory lacked she supplied with a remarkable degree of aptitude.

After this she told a story, following out the thread and clothing it in the most beautiful language. She made the following expressions, her countenance changing with the sentences: "Jesus is my friend." "Crucel brothers." "O, if I should go astray, what voice would there be to woo me from an erroneous path!" All her remarks were seemingly addressed to her mother, though dead, yet living in the memory of her child. She sang a song, "I am dying," with most pathetic tones, every eye was filled with tears. All this time Dr. Menes had tried in vain to attract her attention. She awoke at a quarter to one, and said she would again enter the same state when one o'clock should come, which was verified on the striking of the bell. She continued in this condition, which was not so severe as before, for an hour, when she awoke and became extremely lively and vivacious in conversation. She resumed the floor and danced until late in the morning.

She is represented as being very pretty, and intelligent for one of her age. Her mother died some time since, leaving her with her father and three brothers, the first of whom seems to care little about and the last three to abuse and cruelly and brutally beat her. While she is cruelly beaten, she is also starved for days. Her appetite at the ball room is represented as having been most ravenous, and she is said to have eaten much more than three healthy persons ought to have done, without suffering a derangement of the system.

She was escorted to her home, on the corner of South Union and Spruce streets, on the termination of the ball.

COMPRESSED LEATHER.—A substance under this name is now manufactured in considerable quantity in England, and is prepared by first cleansing shoemaker's waste and cuttings from dust and foreign matters, and reducing to fine filaments. The cuttings of ox or other hides are also reduced to a fibrous mass. These combined together, in certain proportions, and mixed with water, to which has been added one per cent. of sulphuric acid, until the whole becomes a plastic mass, which is then pressed into moulds of the desired size and shape. After drying by steam, they are passed through rollers on one side and roughened on the other to produce the grain and flesh sides of the leather. About one pound of glycerine to the hundred weight is added to render the leather more flexible. For many purposes, as for soles and heels of shoes, etc., it is equal to natural leather, and can be sold at one-half the cost.

The crowd who daily pass St. Paul's, Broadway, N. Y., are occasionally appealed to by a person who now and then takes his stand there for charity. This person, who purports to be bereft of sight, is led by a dog, the latter bearing a cane with the words, "I am blind." A benevolent gentleman who had been in the habit of dropping a penny in the beggar's hat passed by rapidly one morning without the least act of liberality, when the supposed blind party rushed after him, saying, "What! you are not going to pass without giving me something?" The gentleman turned in surprise, and said, "Why, I thought you were blind!" "O, no, sir," was the cool reply; "it is the dog that is blind!"

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:—My wife, Jane Wright, having abandoned my bed and board at Brentsville, Prince William county, Va., without just cause, all persons are hereby warned against crediting her on my account, as I will pay no debts of her contracting; and she having taken with her my infant children, Mary Ann, Charles, Leroy, Lucien and Margaret, all persons are warned against harboring her or them, as I will enforce the law against all so offending against my rights. I understand they are in the neighborhood of Gordonsville, Va., and no expenses incurred by them there or elsewhere will be paid by me.
